The Uplink team has done an incredible job of remaking the game in browser. The result is a modern, pretty, and playable Half-Life: Uplink that runs in your web browser, and it's absolutely stunning. The package is so good, that I encourage anyone who has never played it to download and try it out. Any reference I make to Uplink on this page will be in regards to the Half-Life remake, which is called Half-Life: Uplink, not the original game, which is called Half-Life: Uplink. The original has been around for many years, and has had many great mods created for it, but I'm happy to say that there's a fairly new mod that replaces the original game in a very smart way. If you're familiar with Half-Life, and I'm guessing you are if you're reading this, you know that the original Half-Life games consist of two parts: The first part of the game is an isometric exploration game that takes place on Black Mesa, and the second part of the game is the Gravity Gun action game that takes place on the Citadel. When I originally played Half-Life I was pretty shocked that the game was so short. In fact, the game was so short that it was hard for me to grasp the fact that the final level is over 200 minutes long. The replay value for the game is one of the lowest in a Half-Life game. I liked the game and played it a lot, but I don't think that I'll ever play it again. I feel that I've played it enough times to have the same experience every time. You may be asking yourself, "Why would someone like Half-Life and want to play it online in a web browser?" The answer is actually pretty simple. Half-Life: Uplink is a Half-Life game that plays just like the original game, and the new game is absolutely stunning. I never played Uplink online, but I can tell you that the remake is light years beyond the original. If you have never played Half-Life or Uplink, I urge you to download the Half-Life: Uplink demo now and play it online in a web browser. The Half-Life: Uplink demo is pretty short, but it gives you a taste of what the remake will be like.
